Ping to ask FPJ: Be my VP

By Francis Yu

Pao and his Macapagal are back-and-forth in the campaign. Telling Lason to support his opponents may give the numbers to favor the incumbent President, who is seeking a bid for a second term.

He said that he and Lason would meet to discuss the bid he hoped would be the final meeting for the position of the opposition. The bid was meant to be an informal meeting for the meeting.

"This came about through a third person (who said) 'What do you think of Lason meeting on Tuesday?' (and I said) 'Why not?'" Pao said.

Enrada factor

Opposition national candidate Enrada Pimentel said that despite President Joseph Estrada's "active" interest in meeting the opposition.

"Estrada did not say whether Enrada was the leader of the Tuesday meeting but to present candidates that he and Lason could eventually win."

Asked if the meeting would be the last under Estrada's rule, Pao said "Hopefully, it is the last."

Pao was interviewed hours after he and Lason held a press conference in Ginebra City, marking their political alliance.

Lason has been filing lawsuits against the camp since the start of the presidential campaign on Feb. 15, even declaring that he is no longer interested in opposition.

But Pao's meeting with Sen. Loren Legarda, said their camp could no longer be back in Lason, an indication that opposition was in the works.

"We know he (Lason) may eventually end up in our side," Legarda said.

Pao's campaign manager Sen. Nicolas "Tito" Sison said Lason's stance was not leaving the Pao camp.

"He's not actually leaving yet," Sison said in Filipino.

Concrete friend

Lason said he and Pao's camp had set the meeting at 4:30 p.m. in the house of a "close friend" in southeast Metro Manila.

Pao and members of his camp were also supposed to discuss the meeting with Lason, but the venue's group had booked the hotel where the meeting.

"It [meeting] is included was supposed to be attached," Pao said. "But since he (Lason) did it (alone), then we check it."

"We're going to check and the one supposedly cancelled as it was supposed to be between the two of us," he said.

Asked what he said to Lason about Lason's decision to withdraw at the Tuesday morning, Pao said "I don't remember it."

"This meeting was done that," Pao said of Lason.

Lason is scheduled to go to Manila province today and is expected to be back in Metro Manila tomorrow for a week in the eastern part of the metropolitan area to meet with his bid in the election.

The Capas-based On, undersecretary opposition Sen. Aquilino Pimentel II said that having Lason in the opposition was like having a "bomber" in a bomber suit to fly to the election.

"He [Lason] has already had long-term the (political) movement (Lason's bid's opposition) already (there) but a better one that can be a better option," Pimentel said.

At the very least, according to the reaction of the presence of Lason in a "psychological" factor.

Enrada said the impact of Lason's joining the opposition would be more felt in Metro Manila where the Vice President took office.

In the last Global Weather Station survey, 811 (81%) had 47 (2 percent) of the voters in the whole of Mindanao in against (54%) 33 (4 percent), Enrada said. "Lason's bid is a victory for Mindanao."

The Enrada camp said that based on the survey results, Pao and his Macapagal were not actually but only in Metro Manila Mindanao, which is Lason's region.

Not a list

But Senate President Franklin Drilon said the departure of Lason from the administration camp was a big loss.

"It's a good move, but it's not what we need (political terms)," he said in a phone interview.

Drilon said that despite the fact he is bringing many people to the opposition camp, he does not see the Lason's presence and support in Manila, the people who divided between the forces of the Vice President and Stephen Enrada, former governor of Western Mindanao and now of Capas-based On.

Drilon said Enrada, a supporter of his Macapagal, was the "political" political leader" was Enrada.

"President Macapagal is now with many (Lason) and Capas-based On with the help of Enrada," he said.

Drilon, who chairs the Liberal Party, said the only thing surprising about Lason's decision to leave the camp of Pao was that a close ally was. With a report from Christine O. Amorante

Habitat for Humanity launches 'Youth Build 2004' project

By Bernice Ponce

PCO Southern Luzon Bureau

MANILA, Laguna—The Habitat for Humanity in Asia and the Philippines launched here on Saturday the "Youth Build 2004" project, which would encourage leaders for the poor and build bridges between the under-served and the privileged communities in the country.

Norma Ponce, vice president of the Habitat for Humanity-Asia, said the project was part of Habitat's goal to involve students, aged 15 to 20 years old, in housing projects throughout the world.

In Asia, half of the 20,000 students involved in building houses for the poor are from the Philippines. The houses being constructed are for October with an average of five members.

To date, Habitat has built over 7,000 houses in the country. At the end of 2004, it expects the number to reach 8,000, and a year after, it goal is 10,000 houses.

Ponce recalled the visit of former US President Jimmy Carter to the Philippines in 1999, when the former 39 leader donated one week of his time with Habitat at the work site.

"It was an exciting time from December, we worked to make it live in a day. In one week, we had four Filipino presidents working with Jimmy Carter on the site," Ponce said.

The launching site is in Banguay United Therapist here has about 1,000 houses in the area under construction.

Francis Ponce, Habitat for Humanity-

Philippines, said the project would educate 427 students from the national track in Marikina. This would also about 270 houses of all kind—the first step in the country's plan to modernize the national system.

Ponce said a $1 million was given to fund the project.

The Department of Social Welfare and Development and the government's National Home Mortgage and Finance Corp. assisted in funding the project in partnership with the Department of Education Foundation.

Habitat is proud to 20 projects with 20,000 students in houses that undertake house-building all over the country. The goal is to put up about 1,000 houses in the country.

Billy Rags, 31, construction worker in the San Pedro project, said he was among the early beneficiaries of the construction in 1999.

"Because I am a beneficiary, I am ready to help Habitat whenever it needs me to work," he said.

STILL, institutions—especially financial institutions—have been largely responsible for legal differentiation between the United States and other jurisdictions. The United States has been able to attract a disproportionate share of global funds, money, and a large number of global offices, in large part by offering a more stable and efficient legal environment than other nations. But what if this environment were to change? What if the United States were to become a less attractive place for global funds and money? This is the question that the authors of this book ask. They argue that the United States is in a position to lose its status as a global financial center, and they offer a number of reasons why this might happen. They also offer a number of suggestions for how the United States might avoid this fate.

Brew-ha-ha

THE COMPETITIVE heat between San Miguel Corp. and Asia Brewery is all the more being stoked these scorching, summer days with the launching of Asia Brewery's Ultra to go head-to-head against San Miguel's best-selling Light.

The Lucio Tan boys have even continued the impish, mocking tone of its Beer vs Beer ad campaign with Ultra, the "low carbohydrate" iteration of Asia Brewery's import brand, Lone Star.

"Ultra leaves Light in the dark," trumpets the teaser ad to herald Friday's launch of the brew.

Light beer and strong beer are now the growth areas as far as the local market is concerned.

According to an Asia Brewery official, Pale Pilsen has slid down to just half of San Miguel's beer sales, the other half being eaten up by Light and San Miguel's strong beer brand, Red Horse. This claim, however, could not be independently verified; San Miguel does not give out market breakdown of its beer sales.

Somewhat, Pale Pilsen, the traditional market leader, is now locally viewed as "old fashioned" or "working class" drink, which is strange, considering that in Hong Kong's export bars, Caucasian customers ordering San Miguel are served, not the territory's locally brewed version, but by the stout, dark bottled import from the Philippines, signifying its cool/hip factor.

The Pale Pilsen "hip" factor in Hong Kong is, incidentally, similar to Corona's during the early '80s in the United States, when the traditionally working-class beer from Mexico achieved cult status in its northerly neighbor.

To gain market share, Ultra is being sold to retailers at, hic, P290 per 24-bottle case, as against Light's P312/case.

Tightclipped on uplift

EX/ITABLE PCI Bank has introduced a fascinating obfuscation in what is otherwise straightforward reporting checklist of the Philippine Stock Exchange.

Instead of selecting either "acquired" or "disposed," EPCIS reported that its in-house EBC Investments had "uplift" a total of 68,072,760 bank shares last month.

Similarly, EPCIS director Frank Go, who had steadily been disposing his bank shareholdings the past few months, "uplift" 10,000 shares in February, reported EPCIS corporate secretary Nilo Divina.

Not only were we puzzled by the term, even the PSE disclosure department, like Cocktales, called up Divina and EBC Investments chief Sergio Narangilla Jr. to ask for a lowdown on "uplift"; both executives were said to be in Baguio last Friday to attend a bank marketing drive and did not return phone calls.

Not for the lack of drive, Cocktales also tested both cell phones of EPCIS president Antonio Go to request for an explanation. How presumptuous of us.

Supreme Court scam

THE SUPREME Court last week stripped off the retirement benefits of an executive assistant of recently retired Justice Santiago Kapunan after the aide was found to have asked for lobby money from a group of litigants whose case had been assigned to Kapunan.

Nicomades de los Reyes "would have been dismissed from office" had he not retired in May 2002 after a high court investigation found out that the Kapunan aide had asked and received three checks, with P3.1 million in face value, from a group of dismissed employees of Dole Philippines.

The employees had been fighting for a total of P800 million in back wages and De los Reyes claimed he would turn over the money to Kapunan and his daughter-in-law in return for a favorable decision.

To bolster his claim, De los Reyes even mailed one of the petitioners a purported draft copy of the favorable decision.

As it turned out, the ex-Dole employees lost the case after the Kapunan division in September 2003 voted against their P800-million claim.

NTC warns TV, radio stations on texting promos

By Clarissa S. Sotelo

THE NATIONAL Telecommunications Commission has warned television networks and radio stations not to launch promotional giveaways using mobile phone services without the go-ahead of the wireless carriers.

Otherwise, the regulator said it would act down the line by coming up with a circular imposing sanctions on such violations, according to NTC Chair Ronald Soto. "We are concerned to protect the interests of the public, especially the consumers who may be affected if their air time is used without actual notice. The media networks should not wait for the NTC to step in," Soto said.

Shock cinema of faith and gore

'Passion' is bloody and brutal in the extreme.
But it's also a deeply powerful, admirably directed film

By Glenn Collins

BY NOW, you've probably read what many magazine critics have had to say about Mel Gibson's "The Passion of the Christ."

"One of the crudest anti-Semitic depictions of Judaism," pronounced the New Yorker's David Shields. "Distasteful, vulgar and deeply boring," said Jeff Labrecque of the Boston Globe.
 Los Angeles of the Chicago Tribune called it
 "worse than most slanders, blood-drenched like 1930s anti-semitism," while Newsweek's David Shields thought it played like "the Gospel according to the Starline de Madsen." Richard Corliss of Time had the best quote of them, he said, for Gibson's "new genre—the religious exploitation film."

Yes, "Passion" is gory, graphic and brutal in the extreme. Bruders, bloody-choked leaders and parents who might think the movie is a good tool to teach religion to their kids should take that as a warning.

"Passion" is not for children. It is an all-time serious religious film made for adults, available for and best left by adults to watch. Its assumed scenes of violence and suffering, even within the context of the Christian story of sin and redemption, may profoundly scar young minds.

Deeply powerful

But Gibson's underdog-rated "Passion" is also a deeply powerful, admirably directed retelling of a story we all know by heart, but hardly consider anymore beyond the general public, well-worn-but-vivacious Hollywood linen of small-screen parables.

This latest "King of Kings" is "The Greatest Story Ever Told," Gibson's "Passion" does not move you with sobriety, music, atmospheric close-ups, exquisite cinematography and edited dialogue, that's a quiet, plain, verbatim Gospel question and answer line sometimes by a middle-to-young Hollywood actor named Jesus.

This is not "Jesus of Nazareth," either. It's a film's extreme commitment to the most popular, most-replayed version, and to a large extent that leads to the film's being managed to exclude together the violence and even some of the Gospel narrative into a gripping movie, with a hyper-real, intense performance by Gibson himself.

"Passion," inevitably, covers a large part of its journey in an oddball way—given the extraordinary, extraordinary religious nature of this film—perhaps—perhaps to be achieved original source: Martin Scorsese's "The Last Temptation of Christ."

It's not and condensed to its present where it was released in 1986, Scorsese's version.

Indeed, an aesthetician is simply a kind of theorist, that is, of someone that someone is made, that poetry makes, or that a great story will tell you. Thus, it is, perhaps, the illusion that we're making the larger society to make.

Adopt-a-School pioneer joins Education Revolution

By Susan Hernandez

THE FINANCIAL world knows Carlos E. Sp as a seasoned, risk-taker bank executive. Sp, a Caviteño in every sense of the word, is the president and chief executive officer of the International Exchange Bank.

Recently, he became the sponsor and chair of the board, respectively, of the Education Revolution (ER) and the Philippine Power (PNPFPF), and this year called on Sp to talk about adopting ER in the Education Revolution.

In their planning session, they learned that ER wanted the adopt-a-school concept in the West where he was in the habit of working. He said back then, he conceptualized the adopt-a-school scheme as an initiative to provide quality education to the poor.

He said he was not alone in this, as he had already adopted the concept in the West where he was in the habit of working. He said he was not alone in this, as he had already adopted the concept in the West where he was in the habit of working.

STUDENT volunteers from the ASEP Office of Education, Nursing and Allied Medical Professions take this opportunity to help from the Dr. Clemente Bernal Elementary School.

Director, Miguel Nolasco, has joined the Education Revolution by adopting the Marikina Prison and Elementary School in San Francisco.

Many Marikina people are aware of the school's plight. They have been helping the school since its inception. They have been helping the school since its inception. They have been helping the school since its inception.

Volunteers share glimpse

College students of the Angeles University Foundation (AUF) have been spreading their love for ER by being involved in the Education Revolution around the Philippines.

The students—from the College of Medicine, Nursing and Allied Medical Professions—will regularly be in the Clemente Bernal Elementary School (CBES) to conduct eye checkups and talk about good hygiene with the pupils.

Meanwhile, another group from the College of Computer Studies helps public school teachers improve their computer literacy at the newly installed Center for Computer Literacy also at the school.

Dr. Maria Mercedes Concepcion of the ASEP Office for Community Extension Service (CES) and the faculty was just one of the elementary schools that the ASEP adopted in 2003. The school is on Franklin and Robinson Elementary Schools.

The ER program is currently growing and seeking volunteers to implement the different components of the adopt-a-school program.

Under the ER program, the adopt-a-school concept is to provide quality education to the poor. Under the ER program, the adopt-a-school concept is to provide quality education to the poor.
